Does Parenting Matter? Revisiting the Nature vs. Nurture Debate

Stacey Doan, Assistant Professor, Psychology

Bauer Forum, Bauer Center South

Professor Stacey Doan is a developmental health psychologist, and the recipient of an NIH grant and several early career awards. She has published in the top developmental and health journals and her book, The Social Foundations of Emotions is being published by the American Psychological Association. Join her as she discusses the most recent research on epigenetics and how parenting can get “underneath the skin” to influence stress biology, and behavioral outcomes. Learn why “skin to skin” contact matters, the advantages of having a difficult personality, and why a little bit of stress might be a good thing.

Will the Class of 2018 or 2019 Graduate in a Recession Year? Manfred Keil, Associate Professor, Robert Day School of Economics and Finance

Mary Pickford Auditorium, Bauer Center South

Associate Professor of Economics Manfred Keil will discuss the business cycle analysis and the work he, with the help of a small army of research assistants, has done for the Lowe Institute of Political Economy and the Rose Institute of State and Local Government. CMC has partnered with UCLA's Anderson School Forecast over the last seven years to analyze and forecast economic activity in the U.S. with a particular focus on Southern California. Join Professor Keil as he talks about the second longest economic expansion during the Post World War II period. Part of his analysis will focus on the future of the Southern California and U.S. Economy. Looking back at the Great Recession (December 2007 – June 2009), it was the CMC class of 2008 that bore the brunt of the pain, after what looked like another "Great Moderation" Recession turned into a Hella Recession when the Investment Bank of Lehman Brothers failed on September 15. While none of the leading economic models or forecasting techniques signal a recession over the next 18 months, Professor Keil will be asking, and potentially answering, the question "Will the Class of 2019 Graduate in a Recession Year?"

4:00 to 5:00 p.m.

Speaker: Ron Klain P'20

Picking for Keeps: How the President Selects, and the Senate Reviews, Justices of the Supreme Court.

The process of selecting and confirming life-tenured Supreme Court Justices – and other federal judges -- can shape our laws and society for decades. Long after a President is gone, the men and women he appoints to the federal bench will still be determining life-and-death matters with wide-ranging implications. How does a President decide who to entrust with this power? How should the Senate exercise its role providing its “advice and consent” to these selections? Ron Klain, a veteran of the selection and confirmation of eight Supreme Court justices, discusses these questions and his ideas for reform of the contentious and consequential process. Business attire preferred. Advance reservations required.
